

ABSTRACT

The present invention is directed to a novel system and method for traffic engineering in a packet-switched network, such as an Internet Protocol ("IP") based backbone network. A global view of the network is constructed utilizing a network data model that can be readily constructed from the balkanized network information associated locally with the individual elements in the network. The data model, in turn, can be utilized to support useful traffic engineering tools such as routing modeling and visualization.